The red carpet was rolled out once again Tuesday for Sacramento's annual night of stars, as the 13 newest members of the California Hall of Fame were inducted in ceremonies at the California Museum.

Carol Burnett let loose one of her trademark Tarzan yells for 350 gathered onlookers, including four young girls from Fair Oaks who shouted in unison, "We love you, Miss Hannigan," referring to her role in "Annie" (1982), a movie she made long before they were born.

"She's one of my favorites," Elvie Belson, 8, said breathlessly.

Burnett was joined on the red carpet by such fellow honorees as filmmaker George Lucas ("Star Wars"), former Intel CEO Andrew S. Grove, former Oakland Raiders coach and TV commentator John Madden, author Danielle Steel, bodybuilding pioneer Joe Weider and Air Force test pilot Chuck Yeager, the first man to break the sound barrier.

"It's very significant," Olympic decathlete Rafer Johnson said of the honor as he made his way through the crowd. "I was raised in Kingsburg, and I had some skills and abilities as did other kids in my school. No matter how good you are, you can't be the best you can be unless somebody helps you. The people in my community helped me, and I try to do that in my life."

Johnson founded California Special Olympics.

Five individuals were inducted posthumously: industrialist Henry J. Kaiser, philanthropist Joan Kroc, artist Fritz Scholder, slain gay rights advocate Harvey Milk, and California Gov. and U.S. Sen. Hiram Johnson.

Each of the deceased honorees was represented by family or friends, other than Johnson, California's 23rd governor.

"It's the poignancy of life that
